INTRODUCTION

Language is the soul of a nation, the mirror of its historical memory, and the foundation of its spiritual heritage. The identity, culture, and worldview of every people are primarily reflected in their native language. Therefore, paying attention to the mother tongue means showing respect for the nation's past, present, and future.

In the era of globalization, preserving the Uzbek language, developing it in accordance with modern requirements, and transmitting it to younger generations have become urgent social and cultural tasks. As emphasized by the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan Sh.M. Mirziyoyev, "Respect for the mother tongue is respect for the people and the nation." This statement highlights the strategic importance of language in strengthening national unity and cultural continuity.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

The Role and Significance of the Mother Tongue in Society

Language is the most important condition for the social existence of a people, serving as a unifying force of thought, culture, and spirituality. The Uzbek language, formed over centuries, has become a rich source of historical memory, literature, art, and scientific knowledge. Today, it functions not only as the state language but also as a symbol of national unity and independence.

The increasing prestige of the Uzbek language indicates a growing level of national self-awareness. Its development has opened new opportunities in education, science, culture, and information technologies. Moreover, the international recognition of the Uzbek language reflects the outcomes of a consistent and nationally oriented language policy implemented during the years of independence.

State Policy and Language Development

Since independence, the development and application of the Uzbek language as the state language have remained a priority of public policy. Amendments to the Law "On the State Language of the Republic of Uzbekistan" (2019–2020), the establishment of the State Language Development Department, and the introduction of Language Day have strengthened the social status of the Uzbek language.

Currently, official documentation, scientific works, and international communications are increasingly conducted in Uzbek. The publication of new dictionaries, учебные пособия, and methodological guidelines by linguists also demonstrates positive progress. However, the integration of the Uzbek language into digital platforms and artificial intelligence systems remains one of the most pressing tasks.

The Role of Society in Preserving and Enriching the Language

Language development depends not only on state policy but also on the active participation of every citizen. Preserving linguistic purity, promoting correct speech and writing, and fostering love for the mother tongue are shared social responsibilities.

Parents, teachers, intellectuals, and young people must contribute to language preservation. While interest in foreign languages among youth is a positive phenomenon, it should not lead to indifference toward the Uzbek language. On the contrary, learning foreign languages can serve as a means to enrich the expressive capacity of the mother tongue and promote it internationally.

New Opportunities for the Uzbek Language in the Digital Era

In the digital age, the vitality of any language is determined by its presence on the internet and in information technologies. Strengthening the Uzbek language in digital environments, mobile applications, translation systems, and voice assistants is of great importance.

Although electronic dictionaries, text analysis tools, and online spell-checkers already exist, further efforts are required. The use of the Uzbek language in artificial intelligence-based translation and speech recognition systems will significantly enhance its global visibility. This process requires joint efforts from linguists, programmers, and young specialists.

CONCLUSION

The mother tongue is a sacred national treasure that embodies historical memory and spiritual values. Preserving, enriching, and transmitting it from generation to generation is the moral duty of every citizen.

The idea “Together for the development of our mother tongue” reflects social unity and collective responsibility. In the modern world, the development of the Uzbek language is not only a national but also a global process. The richer and more developed the language becomes, the higher the international prestige of the country.

Therefore, the active use of the Uzbek language in science, culture, technology, and diplomacy, as well as its continuous enrichment and protection, should remain our highest priority. Preserving the language means preserving the nation itself.
